

EHR certification: Where to steer from here?

Diana Manos

It seems just about everybody has a gripe or two concerning the meaningful use program: software vendors that make electronic health records systems, hospital CIOs, the very people charting the related committees and, of course, physicians.

Whether that means it's time to trim the EHR program's sails, turn the boat around, or abandon ship entirely is becoming a matter of increasingly winded debate.

And product certification is perhaps fanning those arguments more than any other aspect of meaningful use now.
